Unglamorous James Bonds:

So you want to be a James Bond, leading a glamorous life of adventure and romance, with hefty expense accounts and lots of sexy blondes? Well, on WPIX' Open End show, a group of real-life 007s informed us that spies are actually hardworking, underpaid, almost humdrum people.

One of them, Ladislav Farago, said the CIA carefully scrutinizes operatives' expense accounts and, in fact, "there's a bookkeeper behind every agent." And Christopher Felix, who once was active for us in Communist Hungary, complained there's so much paper work to do that a "spy can't really spy."
